An approach to gun control you will not like, and neither do I

To be clear, I am against violence and I believe that owning and using firearms for legitimate reasons is a reasonable thing. That includes hunting game, suppressing pests on farms, self-defense, and defense of your home. However, the extent of gun violence in the United States has motivated me to make a suggestion that I believe is rational, but I do not actually support.

Kill politicians who voted against gun control

If you have a family member recently (within 90 days) killed in a mass shooting:

- Legally purchase an assault type weapon with a large clip and plenty of bullets.
- Kill any politician who has consistently voted against gun control.
- Immediately after shooting them, put down your gun and surrender.

Plea self-defense and temporary insanity

When it comes to court, admit you did it, explain that:

- You were suffering from the shock of your relative being killed.
- You felt compelled to act to protect yourself and your other relatives from being killed in the next mass shooting.
- Since you didn't know who the next mass shooter might be, you had to act in the only way that could make a difference.
- That was to kill politicians who continue to put guns in the hands of the people who killed your relative(s) and would someday kill you.

You will be funded for your defense

Start an online crowd funding campaign for your defense and you will be able to afford the best lawyers in the land. There are plenty of folks who want gun control and, when you explain yourself, they will decide you acted justly, even if they, like me, are against violence.

You will likely get off

As long as the jury includes someone whose relatives have been killed in a similar shooting, and likely even if not, the jury will, regardless of the law, determine that your actions were justified and indeed self-defense and perhaps temporary insanity.

Conclusions

If you and others like you start to do this, two things will happen: 1) politicians will vote for gun control out of self-preservation, and 2) those who do not will be killed off and replaced with those who will. Problem solved.

Again, I do not support this approach, but I think it is rational and likely to work regardless. And if a close relative of mine was killed, I might go nuts and do the same thing.
